TRUMAN THE KINGMAKER

Seldom in a Republic, or Democracy, such as ours, do we see a demonstration like the one Saturday put on by former President Harry S. Truman in "crowning" Averell Harriman as his favorite for the Democratic Standard Bearer—the "fairest of them all," as a cartoonist in Sunday's Commercial Appeal dubs him.

Of course his blessings on the New York "Fair Dealer" who would use federal troops to de-segregate public schools in the South, "if necessary," is the indorsement of only one private citizen, or so it would appear.

As a matter of fact it is the weight of the two best greased political machines on earth, New York's Tammany Hall, and Kansas City's Pendergast outfit, and Mr. Harriman may have his eyes open if, and when, he discovers the "dumping of Adlai" is not for his benefit at all, but merely as a clever maneuver to throw the convention into a dead-lock in behalf of Stuart Symington of Missouri, or even Truman himself.

For, while the nomination of the former president may be considered a remote possibility he is certainly the best vote-getter in the party, and he has acted like a candidate ever since he landed in Chicago.

Regardless of what his aims are if he succeeds in blocking Stevenson at his late date he will emerge as the kind of politician this country can do without.

Millions of people in 1952 would not believe he could step on an airplane in Washington, fly to Chicago, have the convention kill time during his flight, plus a couple of hours for a leisurely steak dinner, and arrive on the floor in plenty of time to knock Estes Kefauver out of the nomination after he led on the first two ballots, then name the former Governor of Illinois who had repeatedly said up to the time the convention met that he was not a candidate, and would not campaign even if he were chosen as the nominee.

Some are saying now that Adlai will certainly be nominated on the second ballot, (it's the same ones who were saying last Friday he was a certain winner on the first ballot), and all the polls indicate he will be the nominee. They may find that polls mean no more in 1956 than they did in 1948, and that Truman's influence is as strong as a private citizen as it was as president when he was the backing of city machines.

The national election of 1952 was actually a "bloodless revolution." It was far more than a contest between the two major parties. For those who held the balance of power then were Democrats and Independents who voted against Trumanism. The then president was the biggest weight Adlai Stevenson carried through that campaign, and his support will be the biggest weight any Democratic candidate can carry this year.

As a politician he represents in full measure practically everything this nation can best do without, including his supreme ego and his sincere belief that he is the biggest political power in the United States.

We said in this column more than five years ago when Senator Estes Kefauver entered his first state democratic primary against Truman (and beat him) that his best chance to become President was to denounce anything and practically everything Harry S. Truman stood for, in office and in the Democratic Party.

He had the same opportunity to "clean up the mess in Washington" that Eisenhower had, even a better chance. He preferred to "play ball" with Truman and he reaped the consequences in Chicago when Congressman Sam Rayburn refused to even recognize him when he wanted to help-nominate Stevenson. And Mr. Stevenson probably learned more about the character of the man Saturday than he ever knew before.

Held in Slayings

MICHAEL McGINNIS 35 unemployed furniture polisher, leaves a police station in New York after he was booked for the shotgun slaying of his wife, Lilian (center), 32, and her son, Ronald (bottom), 13. The bodies were found after McGinnis walked into the station house and said: "I just killed my wife and son." Another son, Kevin, 8, was found covering in the apartment. McGinnis was committed to Bellevue Hospital for observation after he was arraigned on homicide charges.

Ravishing Redheads Teamed In New Film

THE TEAMING of two of the screen's most beautiful redheads lends lustre to a powerful drama which peers behind the sinful curtain of a corrupt city in "Slightly Scarlet," new Superscope-Technicolor production coming to the Murray Drive-In Theatre, with John Payne, Arlene Dahl and Rhonda Fleming in the co-starring roles.

Presented in Superscope and Technicolor, this Benedict Boggs-RKO feature casts Arlene Dahl and Rhonda Fleming as sisters, though of contrasting personalities. Miss Fleming is the attractive and sharp-witted secretary of the city's reform candidate for mayor. Miss Dahl, in a role quite different from anything she has yet played on the screen, is a kleptomaniac, recently released from prison and hungry for love. When they both become interested in John Payne, a special investigator for the city's crime boss, there is plenty of torrid romance and action.

"Slightly Scarlet" is based on James M. Cain's rough and ruthless novel, "Love's Lovely Counterfeit." Robert Alton is credited with the screenplay and Allan Dwan directed. In addition to its trio of stars, the cast includes Kent Taylor, Ted de Corsia, Lance Fuller and Buddy Baer.

10 Years Ago This Week
 Ledger and Times File

Miss Martha Belle Hood, Memphis, Tennessee, Dickie Hood, Louisville, and Dr. and Mrs. Oliver C. Hood, Shreveport, La., spent the week-end with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Hall Hood.

A group of interested citizens of the county met in the office of Judge Pink Curd Tuesday morning to discuss some means of maintaining the library.

Mrs. Ola Newman of 605 Olive Street had as her luncheon guests Saturday, Mrs. R. L. Moore of Houston, Mrs. Zula Cobb Lawrence of Louisville, both former Paducahans, Mrs. Jack Beale and Miss Lula Clayton Beale.

Mrs. Carl Frazee entertained at her home Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock with a dessert buffet honoring Mrs. Henry Holton, a recent bride.

A "DUKE BOX"

LONDON (U) — The latest rage in Britain is the "Duke Box," a juke box with royal trimmings operated by a duke.

The first duke box is at Woburn Abbey, where the Duke of Bedford has opened the milk bar to help pay estate inheritance taxes. The chrome and glass duke box alone netted him $11.20 the first week.

PENTAGON REDECORATING

WASHINGTON (U) — Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson surveyed fresh paint and new indirect lighting in the Pentagon room where he was holding a news conference. "I have no idea what it cost," Wilson said, but maybe it will shed a little more light and not so much heat."

ENCHANTED HARBOR
 By DOROTHY WORLEY

CHAPTER 34
 "ALVAREZ is a crook, Rita," said Priscilla. "And Look-out House is mixed up in it, although it isn't clear to me yet what Alvarez has done. Those lights flashing were real, though. They were flashing to Red Gallagher's shrimp boat, out there on the water."

"Well, you've really been finding things out. Why did Bill want you along on the adventure?"

"No particular reason. He thought it would give me a thrill, and it did. He said it would be something to tell my grandchildren someday, and that's true, unless I'm asleep and dreaming all this. Sometimes I have to pinch myself to know it's all happening. We'd better join the others. I'm thinking we'll be plenty cold when we get out, even though Peggy says the water is warm tonight."

"Well, think of the good hot coffee, bacon and eggs that are waiting for us," she laughed. "But there's more than that. Priscilla, I think they said."

The guests all went in the water some distance from the Silver Song. There was laughter and shouting. A fire of driftwood had been built on the beach. Alvarez was not with them. He had told them to go ahead and he would join them later, that he had to give last-minute instructions about the breakfast.

It was quiet on the yacht after the guests had gone, water lapping against the wharf, although the shadows of those in the shadows, presumably on some business regarding the boat. The Molly B was still in darkness moving gently with the swell. Deep shadows lay between the two boats where the waning moon did not penetrate.

Two men left the Silver Song, stood around for a few minutes on the wharf, then walked a little way as though strolling for exercise. Presently they came back, were lost in the shadows, and stepped on the Molly B. Again there was no sign of life except aboard the Silver Song, and the shadows of those in the water some distance away. The transfer of the two small chests from the Molly B to the shadowed deck of the Silver Song was accomplished quickly and deftly. It would have been unnoticed by anyone not there for the purpose of watching. There was no sign of Alvarez, nor of Bill and the two men who were with him.

Alvarez walked the floor of his luxurious little private office. It was void of furniture except for the desk, one chair, and a small panel slid back. The chests were brought in. Two minutes later, the panel slid back into place, leaving only a smooth surface. The men were gone as quickly as they had come.

The four men on the door came again, and Alvarez, thinking the men were returning for some purpose, opened the door. But it was Bill who stood there. He held a shining revolver, leveled at close distance. With his other hand, he closed the door behind him. "You're cornered, Alvarez," he said evenly. "Don't move except when I tell you to. I saw the chests when they were brought in. Where are they?"

"Is this a holdup?"

"In a way. A holdup by the United States government."

Alvarez's swarthy face grew less swarthy. His eyes glittered, but he did not panic. There was a revolver in the drawer of his desk, but the desk was across the room. Keeping him covered, Bill walked around the desk, opened the drawer, and there lay the gun, loaded, ready for use. Bill slipped it into his pocket.

"May I light a cigaret?" Alvarez asked, insolence in his voice.

"Not right at this stage of the game. Though I don't doubt that you need it."

"Perhaps you will be good enough to explain?"

"Is it necessary?"

"You're clever, too. Only a finished crook could have concocted this scheme. But this is the end of the trail. It's been a long one, hasn't it? And now,

Ladies, To Improve As Automobile Driver, Talk Less, Says Driving Academy Expert

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK (AP) — The woman driver, with a road record already better than man's, can improve even more if she'll just not talk so much.

So says Jean Lee, director of the American Academy for Safe Driving, where both sexes are taught how to drive and safely.

With the vacation season meaning more women drivers on the highways, Miss Lee emphasizes this warning: Don't talk so much.

"A woman driver, especially if she's traveling with other women, gets to gabbling, and she forgets to watch the road."

Too much talk is one fault. The other two which plague the woman, she said, are over-caution and over-driving — trying to cover too much mileage in one day.

Stop At 400 Miles
No woman should drive more than 400 miles a day . . . 450 at the top," she said. "Break up the trip every hour or two hours, with a stop for coffee. And take a good stretch."

Miss Lee quotes statistics from life insurance companies to show that women are safer drivers than men. In fatal accidents 91 per cent of the time the drivers are men, she said. In non-fatal, the percentage is 88.

The American Automobile Association said that the latest figures it has shows there are close to 67,000,000 motorists, 29 per cent of them women.

If you're planning a motor trip this summer, Miss Lee gives these suggestions.

See that the car has a thorough check-out before you start. Check tires, battery, and general good order. Once on the highway, have the tires checked and rotated periodically.

No High Heels, Please
Drive a safe distance behind the car ahead. Driving experts rate the distance of two-car lengths as safe if you're traveling 20 miles an hour. By the time speed is up to 40, the distance should be 15 to 20 lengths, she said.

Wear low heels and loose skirts or slacks for driving. High heels, she said, are not safe because they do not give a true feeling of the pressure being applied to the accelerator. And, a high heel easily can get caught on the pedal, causing a sudden burst of speed.

She recommended that women leave off the dangling charm bracelets and long, full-cut sleeves. Either can catch on the gear shift or interfere with steering.

Night driving after a day at the beach is hazardous.

"Tests shows," she explained, "that night vision is reduced as much as 30 per cent from a day of sun glare. It takes at least eight hours for the eyesight to get back to normal."

AN "INCENTIVE PLAN" that enabled states to win bonuses in national convention representation by impressive showings in the 1954 elections when the Democrats captured control of Congress has inflated the delegate total from 1,230 four years ago to 1,372. Counting fractional votes and alternates, this will increase the authorized badgeholders to 4,840 instead of only 3,152 in 1952. Proud parents of this plan are Illinois National Committeeman Jacob N. Arvey, Mayor David Lawrence of Pittsburgh, and California National Committeeman Paul Ziffren.

WHAT IF things get hung up here and the Democratic convention runs into the AUG. 20 opening of the GOP convulse in San Francisco? Considering Democratic past history, that is far from impossible.

That is a very real worry for newsmen, radio-TV commentators and their technicians, but it is only one of the amazing coincidences of the convention timing this year. Never have the major parties met so late, June being the traditional month for the GOP and July for the Democrats.

The only later conventions were in 1964 when the Democrats on Sept. 1 nominated Gen. George McClellan to oppose President Lincoln for re-election, and in 1896 when a splinter group from the Democrats, who had picked William Jennings Bryan, met in St. Louis to nominate William Howard Taft in 1908 and 1912, when the Democrats met in Baltimore to nominate Woodrow Wilson.

The Republicans also named Herbert Hoover there in 1932 and Thomas C. Dewey in 1944. Going to and from the Amphitheatre for current sessions, many of them will pass right by the historic Coliseum, scene of the GOP's nomination of Theodore Roosevelt in 1904, William Howard Taft in 1908 and 1912, and the Democrats' nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1932 and 1936.

SENTIMENTAL oldsters among the delegates can visit a hallowed Democratic shrine here by making a side excursion to the mammoth Chicago Stadium, where in 1922, 1940 and 1944 they nominated Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Ray Tabbs of Cadiz Route One are the parents of a son, Stephen Ray, weighing eight pounds 3 1/2 ounces, born on Monday, August 6, at the Murray Hospital.

HIGHLIGHTS AS DEMOCRATS CONVEENE

By Central Press Association
HERE ARE those vaunted streamlining rules that the Democrats have adopted out of consideration for the TV audience: Nominating speeches held to 10 minutes, seconding speeches to five. Demonstrations are to be confined to 30 minutes maximum. When it is necessary to poll delegates individually, it will be done "off camera" with the hung-up states reported at the end of the roll call.

Delegates are not to be permitted to explain their votes, which is a rule that was invoked in 1952 against Senator Estes Kefauver when he tried to plunk for Adlai Stevenson on the last roll call, but was ignored in the famous last roll call of the 1952 convention when Senator William G. McAdoo of California got his revenge against Al Smith, his foe in the famous deadlock of 1928, by getting recognition and announcing the crucial switch of Texas and California to Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The prospect that both parties will have well-kept press and TV coverage that ever before in history, makes them sanguine with the late start.

TRADITIONALLY, a candidate stays away from the convention hall until either he is nominated or all hope is lost. Only Senator Estes Kefauver defied this in 1952.

The only President ever to see himself nominated was James A. Garfield in 1880, who as head of the Ohio delegation led the fight against a third term for U. S. Grant and was floor manager for John Sherman, whom he nominated. On the 34th ballot, Garfield heard 17 votes announced for him, and angrily challenged it. The chairman ruled him out of order, and eventually he was nominated on the 38th ballot.

Horatio Seymour was in the convention hall protesting when the Democrats drafted him to run against Grant in 1868, but to no avail. The closest the three leading contenders for the Democratic nomination may get to the Amphitheatre in the early days of this year's convention are the suites that the Stevenson, Kefauver and Harriman forces have taken in the swank Stockyards Inn next door.

ing the church longest was Bro. N. S. Castleberry who was elected in January 1938 and resigned in April 1951. The church celebrated his 73rd birthday in 1957.

At the time of the establishment of the church there were 12 members, in 1883, 125; 1895, 173; and since that time the growth has been steady until today there are 408 on the church roll. A comparison of fees might be interesting. J. D. Outland was allowed $100 for the year 1886 for the "usual pastoral work." During the 1890's $15 per year was allowed the sexton, but by 1920 he was being paid $7.50 per month. In the early days seventy-five cents to $1.50 was sent to help defray the expenses of the association
